

Singapore - 9 April 2011

On approach to Singapore airport I was seated in the middle row of seats and although I could see dozens of ships from the tail cam on the LCD screen set into the seat in front of me as we were on final approach, it was not until we were on the East Coast Parkway which skirts the coastline that I fully appreciated how many ships were actually moored offshore. Undoubtedly there were at least a hundred ships of all ages, types, shapes and sizes. Unfortunately none were close enough to the road to be identified and it was not until he neared the docks that I saw my first ship.

Three container ships were easy to see from the road although there were many more moored which I could not identify.

Our ships Costa Classica was sadly on its own in the cruise line terminal which is part of a very nice and very large shopping complex. Alongside her was Ocean Pride which was very low in the water and I image on the sewage run but I'm no expert in these things.

The rest of the afternoon between some fantastic rain and thunder storms was spent at the rear of the ship eating and drinking. The cruise terminal is next to the main ferry terminal and throughout the next few hours the piers were busy with a variety of ferries that serve Singapore, Malaysia and Indonesia.

There was a view through the docks into the container terminal and I did see a number of container ships and a single tug although the view was restricted. On a walk to the front of the ship I also saw Hestia Leader a vehicle carrier heading past the entrance into this part of the harbour. I didn't realise that ships would be passing here at the time and probably missed some unusual ships heading North to other parts of the docks. As the back of the ship was where the bar was that is where I was firmly located.

It was nearly dark when we left port. The only ship I saw was Newlead Compass and this is only due to the fact it was lit up like a Christmas Tree, the others probably several hundred in number that were moored around and to the East of Sentosa Island weresadly just lights in the darkness.

Ships / vessels I saw on this day are noted below.

Kuantan - 10 April 2011

Even though the sea was calm with just the odd white cap in sight I was a bit ill first thing and it was only when I saw a moored ship on the forward facing camera from the TV in our room that I roused myself to get up on deck. I blame this bout of sickness on the 24 hrs it took to travel from my house to the ship!

This was actually the only time I felt bad and being on deck as we approached our next port of call made me feel much better. Strangely later in the cruise when I was ashore it felt 'weird' and it was good to get back on board.

Off shore waiting to enter the port were Pagane, Auluc Venus and New Hope. Although I knew that there was a Malaysian Naval base at Kuantan I did not really expect to see anything but four warships were in port and easily identifiable from their pennants. There were also two other ships in port which I have not been able to ID these being a very small vessel with the pennant 102 and a much larger vessel that looked like it was in Coast Guard livery with the pennant 751.

We were assisted to our berth by the tugs Kuantan, Bera and Seeker in front of some jack up rigs. In port there were a number of ships in various states of loading / unloading. Although I was out all afternoon on a trip the only new visitor before we left port in the evening was Budi Mulia.

As we left port and headed North once more and just before it went dark we passed Thor Navigator, Trans Pacific and Anik.

Gulf Of Thailand - 11 April 2011

A full day at sea today with no land in site . At lunch whilst sat at the back of the ship (probably my favourite place on the ship) LT Trieste went past close enough to read her name unaided. This was the only ship I saw all day which I did find surprising. Perhaps we were off the normal sea lanes to Laem Chabang / Bangkok.

Laem Chabang – 12 April 2011

This was one of the places I was looking forward to getting to from a ship spotting point of view. I had the alarm set and was on deck before dawn. We passed quite a number of ships moored some distance out to see which were sadly unidentifiable in the dark. Nearing port I could see ships to the North of us but it was clear that the pilot was taking us away from these although I did see Thailoil 10 and Reimei.

The port was busy, Westerems and Carol A E were in the floating drydock (I wish I had a picture of this) and as we docked I saw quite a number of ships. In fact apart from a single vehicle carrier on the far side of the port I think I identified every ship in port. I also spotted a number of tugs for which I cannot find an IMO for these being Tarua 209 and 217. I only list ships with IMO's (apart from naval vessels) to ensure I don't see them again so they are in my pending file.

In Bangkok we did the river cruise which was good and I did see quite a few ships as we the rivers, canals and waterways of the city although I could not identify any of them. There were quite a few smaller naval / military vessels near the Navy Headquarters and others nearby but I have not been able to identify these or a much larger naval vessel which reminded me of a WWII destroyer which was in dry dock. The small navy ships were all in military grey with white pennants on the sides or back, pennants being 26, 27, 212, 129, 214, 216, 303, 2101, 2105, 3205 and all seemed to be small patrol boats apart from 2101 and 2105 which were tugs.

Laem Chabang – 13 April 2011

After a very late night in Bangkok I was back on deck for a few drinks before I went to bed, while I had been away Cape Moss and CMA CGN Aegean had arrived and Jost was just berthing when I went to bed. In the morning we were again surrounded by some new ships and as we left at lunch time I saw some others just off shore and close to port before we headed south past some small islands. Just before we left my daughter borrowed my cap and looked over the side whereupon it fell off her head and miraculously landed on the dock and not in the water. Saved by a ships officer it was safely returned much to my daughters relief.

Koh Samui – 14 April 2011

To be honest I didn't expect to see any ships here and was pleasantly surprised when we arrived to see a general cargo ship just off shore with a couple of small naval vessels and a ferry in the small port. We went ashore on tenders i.e. the lifeboats so I got to ID the cargo ship. The ferry pier was quite busy and as we left the island in the afternoon I could see a number of other ferries far out to see but these were unidentifiable.

At Sea – 15 April 2011

Didn't see a single ship all day.

Singapore – 16 April 2011

Back in Singapore and an early predawn alarm got me on deck. Again it was the same faces standing leaning over the handrail in the dark, some of them i'm sure must have been shipspotters. We again passed countless ships before it became light enough to see anything by which time we were quite close to port, as a result I only managed to see 15 ships before we berthed in the same place that we were the week before. If it had got lighter an hour before I would have seen many more ships as we sailed west around those anchored off shore.

We spent all day doing tourist stuff in Singapore and on Sentosa where unsurprisingly I saw quite a number of ships from the beach. Back on ship a few new ferries came into the ferry terminal and as we left a few hours before it go dark I managed to see quite a number of ships as we headed North. It was at this point I realised how big Singapore harbour was – The wharfs, docks jetties etc extend a long way from the cruise terminal and the ships are easy to see although it did involve walking from one side of the ship to the other on numerous occasions to make sure I saw as many ships as possible.

Port Klang – 17 April 2011

Early morning found me on deck again on the approach to Port Klang and I was not disappointed. CMA CGM Topaz made a fine sight leaving port and there was a lot of activity with dredgers and other small craft around the entrance to the docks.

The container terminal itself was also very busy with many of the berths occupied, there were a number of tugs buzzing around and by the time we had traversed the full length of the docks and moored at the cruise terminal I had seen some thirty ships.

Again I was on a full day trip this time to Kuala Lumpur and did not get back until late. Luckily we left an hour or so before nightfall and headed North. There are more dock/port facilities here and as a result I saw quite a few smaller product carriers as well as some cargo vessels. One of the last ships I saw was the cruise ship Flamenco I which was a forlorn sight in the company of Garv Prem and Lilly Royal some miles off the coast close to a small island that seemed to be just occupied by a fishing village.

At Sea & Phuket – 18 /19 April 2011

Didn't see any ships here. We moored off shore on the West of the island and went ashore by tender instead of going to the main port and ferry terminal which is on the East Coast. I did see a cruise ship in the distance as we left but this was too far to identify and did not seem to carry any company colours.

Langkawi - 20 April 2011

I did not expect to see anything here and we were alone on our berth which was basically a long L shaped pier jutting into the sea amongst tropical islands. Apart from the odd fishing vessel it was very quiet.

Again I was on a trip this time snorkelling off a small remote uninhabited island about an hour south of the main island. After a coach ride to the main town and marina I did see a few small ferries which are noted below together with Zon 3 which we passed on the way back to port late afternoon.

Penang – 21 April 2011

There were no ships moored off Penang and the first few I saw were as we got close to the cruise ship terminal. Many of the ships I could see were too far away to identify although there were a few ships anchored close enough to us for me to see their names.

Superstar Libra joined us soon after we docked closely followed by the entertainment ship Amusement World which I was advised was one of many such ships in the area. After going ashore hiring a car and driver we toured the island all day visiting the large temple on the island, butterfly park (where there's a picture of Tony Blair in the Foyer) and some other places before getting back just before our departure time.

As we headed North to sail around the island before heading South to Malacca & Singapore we passed Alaf Baru 2 and Hoshu inbound.

Mollaca Straits – 22 April 2011

As you would expect the straits are very busy with shipping. From our ship you could see long lines of ships heading North and South. The ones below are the ones I could see with my binoculars, there were many others which were too far away including very large MSC and CMA CGN vessels. There were so many ships I even tried using marine traffic AIS for this area from the internet café but at the time it was not working.

Mallaca – 22 April 2011

We manoeuvred amongst a number of off shore vessels, a very large crude carrier and tugs before dropping anchor and going ashore for the day in small cigar shaped ferries. These were almost unbearable in the heat and even though we were only in them for an some 30 minutes it seemed much longer. How anyone can go any distance in these vessels I don't know. Luckily on the return journey we returned in a ships life boat with the sides / top open and were 'buzzed by the ferry Indomal Express 5 as it headed out with a full load of passengers leaving us being thrown around in its wake.

Mallaca Straits - 22 April 2011

Heading back out to see we joined the sea lanes on the return leg of our trip back to Singapore just ahead of CMA CGM Mozart. Before it went dark we passed or were passed by three other ships which I could identify, there were plenty of others around us but I couldn't identify them properly. AIS via the internet café was still not working.

Singapore - 23 April 2011

We approached Singapore at a good time. Just after dawn we were approaching from the North and passing numerous ships at jetties, wharfs and anchored waiting to dock. Again I was walking from one side of the ship to the other to make sure I could see as many as possible. Although I did see quite a few ships that I had seen before (some had not moved in the week since I had last been there) I did manage to add 36 new ships to my list before we docked.

As we had a night flight we were allowed to stay on ship until quite late although we had limited luggage. During the day I saw a few more ferries and some container vessels from the back of the ship. Marine Promise was alongside for most of the day on I presume bunkering duty. As we left I saw OOCL China from the coach before heading off to the airport. 27hrs later I was home.
